EXORDIUM.

WHEN on the highest ridge of that strange land,
Under the cloudless blinding tropic blue, Drake and his band of swarthy seamen stood With dazed eyes gazing round them, emerald fans
Of palm that fell like fountains over cliffs Of gorgeous red anana bloom obscured Their sight on every side. Illustrious gleams Of rose and green and gold streamed from the plumes

That flashed like living rainbows through the glades.

Piratic glints of musketoon and sword,
The scarlet scarves around the tawny throats,
The bright brass ear-rings in the sun-black ears,

And the calm faces of the negro guides Opposed their barbarous bravery to the noon;
Yet a deep silence dreadfully besieged Even those mighty hearts upon the verge Of the undiscovered world. Behind them lay The old earth ~~they~~ knew. In front they could not see

What lay beyond the ridge. Only ~~they~~ heard

Cries of the painted birds troubling the heat And shivering through the woods; till Francis
Drake

Plunged through the hush, took hold upon a tree,

The tallest near them, and clomb upward, branch

By branch.

And lo, as he swung clear above
The steep-down forest, on his wondering eyes Mile upon mile of rugged shimmering gold Burst the unknown immeasurable sea.
Then he descended; and with a new voice Vowed that, God helping, he would one day plough

Those virgin waters with an English keel.

So here, before the unattempted task,
Above the Golden Ocean of my dream
I clomb and saw in splendid pageant pass
The wild adventures and heroic deeds Of England's epic age, a vision lit With mighty prophecies, fraught with a doom Worthy the great Homeric roll of song, Yet all unsung and unrecorded quite

By those who might have touched with Raphael's hand

The large imperial legend of our race, Ere it brought forth the braggarts of an hour,

Self-worshippers who love their imaged strength,

And as a symbol for their own proud selves Misuse the sacred name of this dear land, While England to the Empire of her soul Like some great Prophet passes through the crowd

That cannot understand; for he must climb Up to that sovran thunder-smitten peak
Where he shall grave and trench on adamant The Law that God shall utter by the still Small voice, not by the whirlwind or the fire.
There labouring for the Highest in himself
He shall achieve the good of all mankind;
And from that lonely Sinai shall return

Triumphant o'er the little gods of gold That rule their little hour upon the plain.
Oh, thou blind master of these opened eyes
Be near me, therefore, now; for not in pride
I lift lame hands to this imperious theme;
But yearning to a power above mine own Even as a man might lift his hands in • prayer.

Or as a child, perchance, in those dark days
When London lay beleaguered and the axe Flashed out for Rome in England; and the blood

Of martyrs made a purple path for Spain
Up to the throne of Mary; as a child
, Gathering with friends upon a winter's morn For some mock fight between the hateful prince •

Philip and Thomas Wyatt, all at once Might see in gorgeous ruffs embastioned Popinjay plumes and slouching hats of Spain,

Gay shimmering silks and rich encrusted gems,

Gold collars, rare brocades, and sleek trunkhose

The Ambassador and peacock courtiers come Strutting along the white snow-strangled street,

A walking plot of scarlet Spanish flowers, - And with one cry a hundred boyish hands Put them to flight with snowballs, while the wind

All round their Spanish ears hissed like a flight

Of white-winged geese; so may I wage perchance

A mimic war with all my heart in it, Munitioned with mere perishable snow, Which mightier hands one day will urge with steel.

Yet may they still remember me as I Remember, with one little laugh of love, That child's game, this were wealth enough for me.

Mother and love, fair England, hear my
prayer ;

Help me that I may tell the enduring tale Of that great sea-man, good at need, who first

Sailed round this globe and made one little isle,

One little isle against that huge Empire Of Spain whose might was paramount on earth,

O'ertopping Babylon, Nineveh, Greece, and Rome,

Carthage and all huge Empires of the past,
He made this little isle, against the world, Queen of the earth and sea. Nor this alone
The theme ; for, in a mightier strife engaged

Even than he knew, he fought for the new faiths,

Championing our manhood as it rose
And cast its feudal chains before the seat Of kings; nay, in a mightier battle yet He fought for the soul's freedom, fought the fight

Which, though it still rings in our wondering ears,

Was won then and for ever—that great war,

That last Crusade of Christ against His priests,

Wherein Rome fell behind a thunderous roar
Of ocean triumph over burning ships And shattered fleets, while England, England rose,

Her white cliffs laughing out across the waves,

Victorious over all her enemies.

And while he won the world for her domain, Her loins brought forth, her fostering bosom fed

Souls that have swept the spiritual seas
From heaven to hell, and justified her crown.
For round the throne of great Elizabeth Verulam, Burleigh, Sidney, Spenser, More, Clustered like stars, rare Jonson like the crown

Of Cassiopeia, Marlowe ruddy as Mars,
And over all those mighty hearts arose The soul of Shakespeare brooding far and wide

Beyond our small horizons, like a light Thrown from a vaster sun that still illumines Tracts which the arc of our increasing day Must still leave undiscovered, unexplored.

Mother and love, fair England, hear my
prayer,

As thou didst touch the heart and light the flame

Of wonder in those eyes which first awoke
To beauty and the sea's adventurous dream Three hundred years ago, three hundred years,

And five long decades, in the leafy lanes
Of Devon, where the tallest trees that bore
The raven's matted nest had yielded up Their booty, while the perilous branches swayed

Beneath the boyish privateer, the king
Of many young companions, Francis Drake; So hear me and so help, for more than his My need is, even than when he first set sail Upon that wild adventure with three ships And three-score men from grey old Plymouth Sound,

Not knowing if he went to life or death,
Nor caring greatly, so that he were true

To his own sleepless and unfaltering soul
Which could not choose but hear the ring- ing call

Across the splendours of the Spanish Main From ever fading, ever new horizons,
And shores beyond the sunset and the sea.

Mother and sweetheart, England; from whose breast,

With all the world before them, they went forth,

Thy seamen, o'er the wide uncharted waste, Wider than that Ulysses roamed of old,
Even as the wine-dark Mediterranean Is wider than some tide-relinquished pool Among its rocks, yet none the less explored
To greater ends than all the pride of Greece And pomp of Rome achieved; if my poor
song

Now spread too wide a sail, forgive thy son

And lover, for thy love was ever wont
To lift men up in pride above themselves
To do great deeds which of themselves alone They could not; thou hast led the unfaltering feet
Of even thy meanest heroes down to death, Lifted poor knights to many a great emprise, Taught them high thoughts, and though they kept their souls
Lowly as little children, bidden them lift Eyes unappalled by all the myriad stars That wheel around the great white throne of God.

BOOK I.

Now through the great doors of the Council-• room

Magnificently streamed in rich array
The peers of England, regal of aspect And grave. Their silence waited for the Queen :

And even now she came ; and through their midst,

Low as they bowed, she passed without a smile

And took her royal seat. A bodeful hush Of huge anticipation gripped all hearts, Compressed all brows, and loaded the broad noon

With gathering thunder: none knew what the hour

Might yet bring forth; but the dark fire of war

Smouldered in every eye; for every day
The Council met debating how to join Honour with peace, and every day new tales Of English wrongs received from the red hands

Of that gigantic Empire, insolent Spain, spurred fiercer resentments up like steeds

Revolting, on the curb, foaming for battle,
In all men's minds, against whatever odds.
On one side of the throne great Walsingham,
A lion of England, couchant, watchful, calm,
Was now the master of opinion: all Drew to him. Even the hunchback Burleigh smiled

With half-ironic admiration now,

As in the presence of the Queen they met Amid the sweeping splendours of her court,
A cynic smile that seemed to say, "I, too, Would fain regain that forthright heart of fire;

Yet statesmanship. is but a smoother name For the superior cunning which ensures Victory." And the Queen, too, knowing her strength

And weakness, though her woman's heart leaped out

To courage, yet with woman's craft preferred The subtler strength of Burleigh; for she knew

• Mary of Scotland waited for that war

To strike her in the side for Rome; she knew •

How many thousands lurked in England still Remembering Rome and bloody Mary's reign.
France o'er a wall of bleeding Huguenots Watched for an hour to strike. Against all these

What shield could England raise, this little isle,—

Out-matched, outnumbered, perilously near Utter destruction?

So the long debate Proceeded.

All at once there came a cry Along the streets and at the palace-gates And at the great doors of the Council-room!
Then through the pikes and halberds a voice rose

Imperative for entrance, and the guards Made way, and a strange whisper surged around,

And through the peers of England thrilled the blood

Of Agincourt as to the foot of the throne Came Leicester, for behind him as he came

A seaman stumbled, travel-stained and torn, Crying for justice, and gasped out his tale.
“The Spaniards,” he moaned, “the Inquisition!

They have taken all my comrades, all our crew,

And flung them into dungeons: there they lie Waiting for England, waiting for their Queen!

Will you not free them? I alone am left!

All London is afire with it, for this

Was one of your chief city merchant’s ships—

The Pride of London, one of Osborne’s ships!

But there is none to help them! I escaped

With shrieks of torment ringing in these
ears,

The glare of torture-chambers in these eyes

That see no faces anywhere but blind

Blind faces, each a bruise of white that smiles

In idiot agony, washed with sweat and blood, The face of some strange thing that once was man,

And now can only turn from side to side Babbling like a child, with mouth agape, And crying for help where there is none to hear

Save those black vizards in the furnace-glow, Moving like devils at their hellish trade. . . .”
He paused; his memory sickened, his brain swooned

Back into that wild glare of obscene pain!
Once more to his ears and nostrils horribly crept

The hiss and smell of shrivelling human flesh!
His dumb stare told the rest: his head sank down;

He bowed; he fell; he strove in agony With what all hideous words must leave untold;

While Leicester vouched him, "This man's tale is true!"

But like a gathering storm a windy moan
Of passion, like a tiger's, slowly crept From the grey lips of Walsingham. "My Queen,
Will you not free them?"

• Then Elizabeth,
Whose name is one for ever with the name
Of England, rose; and in her face the gleam Of justice that makes anger terrible Shone, and she stretched her glittering sceptre
forth •

And spoke, with distant empires in her eyes.
•

"My lords, this is the last cry they shall wring From English lips unheeded: we will have Such remedies for this as all the world Shall tremble at!"

And, on that night, while Drake

Close in his London lodging lay concealed Until he knew if it were peace or war With Spain (for he had struck on the high seas

At Spain; and well he knew if it were peace

His blood would be made witness to that bond,

And he must die a pirate's death or fly Westward once more), there all alone, he pored

By a struggling rushlight o'er a well-thumbed chart

Of magic islands in the enchanted seas, Dreaming, as boys and poets only dream With those that see God's wonders in the deep,

/ Perilous visions of those palmy keys,
Cocoa-nut islands, parrot-haunted woods,
Crisp coral reefs and blue shark-finned lagoons

Fringed with the creaming foam, mile upon mile

Of mystery. Dream after dream went by, Colouring the brown air of that London night

With many a mad miraculous romance.

There, suddenly, some augury, some flash Showed him a coming promise, a strange hint,

Which, though he played with it, he scarce believed;

Strange as in some dark cave the first fierce gleam

Of pirate gold to some forlorn maroon

Who tiptoes to the heap and glances round Askance, and dreads to hear what erst he longed

To hear—some voice to break the hush; but bathes

Both hands with childish laughter in the gold,

And lets it trickle through his fevered palms,
And begins counting half a hundred times
And loses count each time for sheer delight And wonder in it; meantime, if he knew, Passing the cave-mouth, far away, beyond
The still lagoon, the coral reef, the foam
And the white fluttering chatter of the birds, A sail that might have saved him comes and goes

Unseen across the blue Pacific sea.

So Drake, too, played with fancies; but that sail

Passed not unseen, for suddenly ~~there~~ came A firm and heavy footstep to the door, Then a loud knocking; and, at first, he thought

"I am a dead man: there is peace with Spain,

And they are come to lead me to my doom."
But, as he looked across one shoulder, pride

Checking the fuller watch for what he feared,
The door opened ; and cold as from the sea
The night rushed in, and there against the gloom,

Clad, as it seemed, with wind and cloud and rain,       :

There loomed a stately form and high grim face

Loaded with deadly thoughts of iron war—Walsingham,—in one hand he held a map Marked with red lines; the other hand held
down

The rich, encrusted hilt of his great sword.

Then Drake rose, and the other cautiously

•Closing the door drew near the flickering light,

And spread his map out on the table, saying—

“Mark for me here the points whereat the King

Philip of Spain may best be wounded, mark

The joints of his harness;" and Drake looked at him

Thinking, "If he betray me, I am dead."

But the soldier met his eyes and, with a laugh,

Drake, quivering like a bloodhound in the leash,

Stooped, with his finger pointing thus and thus—

"Here would I guard, here would I lie in wait,

Here would I strike him through the breast and throat."

And as he spoke he kindled, and began To set forth his great dreams, and high romance

Rose like a moon reflecting the true sun
Unseen; and as the full round moon indeed Rising behind a mighty mountain-chain Will shadow forth in outline grim and black

Its vast and ragged edges, so that moon Of high romance rose greatly shadowing
forth

The grandeur of his dreams, until their might Dawned upon Walsingham, and he, too, saw For a moment of muffled moonlight and wild cloud.

The vision of the imperious years to be!
But suddenly Drake paused as one who strays

Beyond the bounds of caution, paused and cursed

His tongue for prating like a moon-struck boy's.

• "I am mad," he cried, "I am mad to babble so!"

Then Walsingham drew near him with strange eyes

And muttered slowly, "Write that madness
down;

Ay, write it down, that madman's plan of thine;

Sign it, and let me take it to the Queen."

But the weather-wiser seaman warily

Answered him, "If it please Almighty God

To take away our Queen Elizabeth,

Seeing that she is mortal as ourselves,

England might then be leagued with Spain, and I

Should here have sealed my doom. I will not put

My pen to paper."

So, across the charts,
With that dim light on each grim countenance
The seaman and the courtier subtly fenced With words and thoughts, but neither would betray

His whole heart to the other. At the last Walsingham gripped the hand of Francis
Drake

And left him wondering.

On the third night came A messenger from Walsingham who bade Drake to the Palace where, without one word,

The statesman met him in an anteroom And led him, with flushed cheek and beating heart,

Along a mighty gold-gloomed corridor
Into a high-arched chamber, hung with tall Curtains of gold-fringed silk and tapestries From Flanders looms, whereon were flowers and beasts

And forest-work, great knights, with hawk on hand,

Riding for ever on their glimmering steeds Through bowery glades to some immortal
face

Beyond the fairy fringes of the world.
A silver lamp swung softly overhead,

Fed with some perfumed oil that shed abroad Delicious light and fragrances as rare
As those that stirred faint wings at eventide Through the King's House in Lebanon of old.

Into a quietness as of fallen bloom Their feet sank in that chamber; and, all round,

Soft hills of Moorish cushions dimly drowsed On glimmering crimson couches. Near the lamp

An ebony chess-board stood inlaid with squares

Of ruby and emerald, garnished with cinque-foils

Of silver, bears and ragged staves: the men, Likewise of precious stones, were all arrayed—Bishops and knights and elephants and pawns—

As for a game. Sixteen of them were set

In silver white, the other sixteen gilt.

Now, as Drake gazed upon an arras, nigh
The farther doors, whereon was richly wrought
The picture of that grave and lovely queen Penelope, with cold hands weaving still The unending web, while in an outer court
The broad-limbed wooers basking in the sun On purple fleeces took from white-armed girls,

Up-kirtled to the knee, the crimson wine;
There, as he gazed and thought, "Is this not like

Our Queen Elizabeth who waits and weaves, Penelope of England, her dark web

Unendingly till England's Empire come;"

There, as he gazed, for a moment, he could vow

The pictured arras moved. Well had it been Had he drawn sword and pierced it through and through;

But he suspected nothing and said nought
To Walsingham; for thereupon they heard The sound of a low lute and a sweet voice Carolling like a gold-caged nightingale, Caught by the fowlers ere he found his mate,

And singing all his heart out evermore To the unknown forest-love he ne'er should see.

And Walsingham smiled sadly to himself, Knowing the weary queen had bidden some maid

Sing to her, even as David sang to Saul; Since all her heart was bitter with her love Or so it was breathed (and there the chess-board stood, " "

Her love's device upon it), though she still,
For England's sake, must keep great foreign kings

Her suitors, wedding no man till she died.

Nor did she know how, in her happiest hour Remembered now most sorrowfully, the moon, Vicegerent of the sky, through summer dews,
As that sweet ballad tells in plaintive rhyme, Silvering the grey, old Cumnor towers and all The hollow haunted oaks that grew thereby, Gleamed on a casement whence the pure
    . white face

Of Amy Robsart, wife of Leicester, wife Unknown of the Queen's lover, a frail bar
To that proud Earl's ambition, quietly gazed And heard the night-owl hoot a dark presage Of murder through her timid shuddering heart.
But of that deed Elizabeth knew nought;
Nay, white as Amy Robsart in her dream
Of love she listened to the sobbing lute, Bitterly happy, proudly desolate;
So heavy are all earth's crowns and sharp with thorns!
But tenderly that high-born maiden sang.

SONG.

*Now the purple night is past,
Now the moon more faintly glows,
Dawn has through thy casement cast Roses on thy breast, a rose,
Now the kisses are all done,
Now the world awakes anew,
Now the charmed hour is gone,
Let not love go, too.*

*When old winter, creeping night, Sprinkles raven hair with white,
Dims the brightly glancing eye,
Laughs away the dancing light,
Roses may forget their sun,
Lilies may forget their dew, Beauties perish, one by one,
Let not love go, too.*

*Palaces and towers of pride Crumble year by year away ;
Creeds like robes are laid aside, Even our very tombs decay !
When the all-conquering moth and rust Gnaw the goodly garment through,
When the dust returns to dust,
Let not love go, too.*

*Kingdoms melt away like snow, Gods are spent like wasting flames, Hardly the new peoples know Their divine thrice-worshipped names !
At the last great hour of all,
When Thou makest all things new,
Father, hear Thy children call,
Let not love go, too.*

The song ceased : all was still ; and now it seemed

Power brooded on the silence, and Drake

A woman come to meet him,—tall and pale And proud she seemed: behind her head two wings

As of some mighty phantom butterfly Glimmered with jewel-sparks in the gold
gloom.

Her small, pure, grey-eyed face above her ruff

Was chiselled like an agate; and he knew It was the Queen. Low bent he o'er her hand;

And "Ah," she said, "Sir Francis Walsingham

Hath told me what an English heart beats here!

Know you what injuries the King of Spain Hath done us?" Drake looked up at her:
she smiled,

“We find you apt! Will you not be our knight?

For we are helpless” — witchingly she smiled—

“We are not ripe for war; our policy Must still be to uphold the velvet cloak Of peace; but I would have it mask the hand That holds the dagger! Will you not unfold Your scheme to us?” And then with a low bow

Walsingham, at a signal from the Queen, Withdrew; and she looked down at Drake and smiled;

And in his great simplicity the man Spoke all his heart out like some youthful knight

Before his Gloriana: his heart burned, Knowing he talked with England, face to
face;

And suddenly the Queen bent down to him,

England bent down to him, and his heart reeled

With the beauty of her presence—for indeed Women alone have royal power like this Within their very selves enthroned and shrined

To draw men's hearts out! Royal she bent
down

And touched his hand for a moment.

“Friend,” she said,

Looking into his face with subtle eyes,

“I have searched thy soul to-night and know full well

How I can trust thee! Canst thou think that I,

The daughter of my royal father, lack

The fire which every boor in England feels Burning within him as the bloody score

Which Spain writes on the flesh of Englishmen

Mounts higher day by day? Am I not Tudor?

I am not deaf or blind; nor yet a king!

I am a woman and a queen, and where Kings would have plunged into their red revenge

Or set their throne up on this temporal shore,
As flatterers bade that wiser king Canúte, Thence to command the advancing tides of battle

Till one ensanguined sea overwhelm throne and king

And kingdom; friend, I take my woman's way,

Smile in mine enemies' faces with a heart
All hell, and undermine them hour by hour!
This island scarce can fend herself from France,

And now Spain holds the keys of all the world,

How should we fight her, save that my poor wit

Hath won the key to Philip? Oh, I know His treacherous lecherous heart, and hour by hour

My nets are drawing round him. I, that starve

My public armies, feed his private foes, .
Nourish his rebels in the Netherlands, Nay, sacrifice mine own poor woman's heart
To keep him mine—there is no sacrifice On earth like this—and surely now stands Fate

With hand uplifted by the doors of Spain Ready to knock: the time is close at hand When I shall strike, once, and no second stroke.

Remember, friend, though kings have fought for her,

This England, with the trident in her grasp,

Was ever woman; and she waits her throne;
And thou canst speed it. Furnish thee with ships

Gather thy gentleman adventurers,
And be assured thy parsimonious queen—‘Tis she knows that chattering of the world—

With thee wealth enough. Then put to sea,

Fly the black flag of piracy awhile Against these blackest foes of all mankind.

No: what hast thou to do with piracy?

Fiestis humani generis indeed

Is Spain: she dwells beyond the bounds of law;

Thine is no piracy, whate’er men say,

Thou art a knight on Gloriana’s quest.

Oh, lay that golden unction to thy soul,

This is no piracy, but glorious war,

Waged for thy country and for all mankind

Therefore put out to sea without one fear, Ransack their El Dorados of the West, Pillage their golden galleons, sap their strength

Even at its utmost fountains; let them know That there is blood, not water, in our veins.
Carry thy scheme out to the glorious end,
And, though at first thou needs must ride alone

And unsupported, ere that end is reached,
When I shall give the word, nay, but one
word,

All England shall be up and after thee,
The sword of England shall shine over thee,
And round about thee like a guardian fire; "
All the great soul of England shall be there;
Her mighty dead shall at that cry of doom Rise from their graves and in God's panoply Plunge with our standards through immortal storms

When Drake rides out across the wreck of Rome.

As yet we must be cautious; let no breath Escape thee, save to thy most trusted friends;

For now, if my lord Burleigh heard one
word

Of all thou hast in mind, he is so much
The friend of caution and the beaten road, He would not rest till he had wrecked thy hopes

And sealed thy doom! Go now, fit out thy ships.

Walsingham is empowered to give thee gold Immediately, but look to him for more As thou shalt need it, gold and gold to spare,

My golden-hearted pilot to the shores Of Empire—so farewell;” and through the
gloom

She vanished as she came; and Drake groped, dazed,
Out through the doors, and found great Walsingham
Awaiting him with gold.

But in the room Where Drake had held his converse with the Queen
The embroidered arras moved, and a lean
face,
White with its long eavesdropping upon death,
Crept out and peered as a venomous adder peers
From out dark ferns, then as the reptile flashes

Along a path between two banks of flowers Almost too swift for sight, a stealthy form —One of the fifty spies whom Burleigh paid—Passed down the gold-gloomed corridor to seek

His master, whom among great books he found,

Calm, like a mountain brooding o'er the sea.
Nor did he break that calm for all these winds

Of rumour that now burst from out the sky.
His brow bent like a cliff over his thoughts,
And the spy watched him half resentfully, Thinking his news well worth a blacker frown.

At last the statesman smiled and answered,
"Go;

Fetch Thomas Doughty, Leicester's secretary."

Few suns had risen and set ere Francis
Drake

Had furnished forth his ships with guns and
men,

Tried seamen that he knew in storms of old,—

Will Harvest, who could haul the ropes and fight

All day, and sing a foc'sle song to cheer Sea-weary hearts at night; brave old Tom Moone

The carpenter, whose faithful soul looked up To Drake's large mastery with a mastiff's
eyes;

And three-score trusty mariners, all scarred And weather-beaten. After these there came Some two-score gentleman adventurers, Gay college lads or lawyers that had grown Sick of the dusty Temple, and were fired With tales of the rich Indies and those tall Enchanted galleons drifting through the West, Laden with ingots and broad bars of gold.
Already some had bought at a great price Green birds of Guatemala, which they wore On their slouched hats, tasting the high

And new-found colours of the world like wine.
By night they gathered in a marvellous inn Beside the black and secret flowing Thames;
And joyously they tossed the magic phrase "Pieces of eight," from mouth to mouth, and laughed

And held the red wine up, night after night, Around their tables, toasting Francis Drake.
Among these came a courtier, and none knew Or asked by whose approval, for each thought Some other brought him; yet he made his way Cautiously, being a man with a smooth tongue,

The secretary of Leicester; and his name Was Thomas Doughty. Most of all with Drake

He won his way to friendship, till at last There seemed one heart between them and one soul.

BOOK II.

So on a misty grey December morn Five ships put out from calm old Plymouth Sound;

Five little ships, the largest not so large As many a coasting yacht or fishing-trawl
To-day; yet these must brave uncharted seas
Of unimagined terrors, haunted glooms,
And shadowy horrors of an unknown world Wild as primæval chaos. In the first,
The Golden Hynde, a ship of eighteen guns, Drake sailed: John Wynter, a queen's captain, next

Brought out the Elizabeth, a stout new ship Of sixteen guns. The pinnace Christopher

Came next, in staunch command of old

Tom Moone

Who, five years back, with reeking powder grimed,

Off Cartagena fought against the stars

All night, and, as the sun arose in blood,

Knee-deep 'in blood and brine, stood in the dark

Perilous hold and scuttled his own ship

The Swan, bidding her down to God's great deep

Rather than yield her up a prize to Spain.

Lastly two gentleman-adventurers

Brought out the new Swan and the Marygold.

Their crews, all told, were eight score men and boys.

Not only terrors of the deep they braved,

Bodiless witchcrafts of the black abyss,

Red gaping mouths of hell and gulfs of fire

That yawned for all who passed the tropic line;

But death lurked round them from their setting forth.

Mendoza, plenipotentiary of Spain, By spies informed, had swiftly warned his
king,

Who sent out mandates through his huge empire

From Guadalchiber to the golden West
For the instant sinking of all English ships And the instant execution of their crews Who durst appear in the Caribbean sea.

Moreover, in the pith of their emprise
A peril lurked—Burleigh's emissaries, The smooth-tongued Thomas Doughty, who had brought

His brother—unacquitted of that charge Of poisoning, raised against him by the friends

Of Essex, but in luckless time released Lately for lack of proof, on no strong plea.
These two wound through them like two snakes at ease

In Eden, waiting for their venomous hour.
Especially did Thomas Doughty toil With soft 'and flowery tongue to win his
way ;

And Drake, whose rich imagination craved For something more than simple seamans' talk,

Was marvellously drawn to' this new friend Who with the scholar's mind, the courtier's gloss,

The lawyer's wit, the adventurer's romance,
Gold honey from the blooms of Euphues, Rare flashes from the Mermaid and sweet
smiles

Copied from Sidney's self, even to the glance

Of sudden, liquid sympathy, gave Drake That banquet of the soul he ne'er had known

Nor needed till he knew, but needed now.

So to the light of Doughty's answering eyes He poured his inmost thoughts out, hour by
hour ;

And Doughty coiled up in the heart of Drake.

Against such odds the tiny fleet set sail ;
Yet gallantly and with heroic pride, Escutcheoned pavisades, emblazoned poops, Banners and painted shields and close-fights hung

With scarlet broideries. Every polished gun Grinned through the jaws of some heraldic beast,

Gilded and carven and gleaming with all hues ;

While in the cabin of the Golden Hynde Rich perfumes floated, given by the great

Herself to Drake as Captain-General; So that it seemed her soul was with the fleet,

A presence to remind him, far away,
Of how he talked with England, face to face,—

No pirate he, but Gloriana's knight.
Silver and gold his table furniture, Engraved and richly chased, lavishly gleamed While, fanned by favouring airs, the ships advanced

With streaming flags and ensigns and sweet chords

Of music struck by skilled musicians Whom Drake brought with him, not from vanity,

But knowing how the pulse of men beats high

To music; and the hearts of men like these Were open to the high romance of earth,
And they that dwelt so near God's mystery Were proud of their own manhood. They went out

To danger as to a sweetheart far away, Who even now was drawing the western clouds

Like a cymar of silk and snow-white furs Close to her, till her body's beauty seemed Clad in a mist of kisses. They desired Her glittering petulance and her sulky sweet Red pouts of anger. They went out to her With pomp and ceremony, richly attired And girt about with honour as befit Souls that might talk with angels by the way.

Light as the sea-birds dipping their white
wings

In foam before the gently heaving prows Each heart beat, while the low soft lapping splash

Of water racing past them ripped and tore Whiter and faster, and the bellying sails Filled out, and the white cliffs of England sank

Dwindling behind the broad grey plains of sea.

Meekly content and tamely stay-at-home
The sea-birds seemed that piped across the
    waves;

And Drake, be-mused, leaned smiling to his friend

Doughty and said, "Is it not strange to know When we return yon speckled herring-gulls Will still be wheeling, dipping, flashing there Just as we leave them? Ah, my heart cries out

We shall not find a sweeter land afar

Than those thyme-scented hills we leave behind!

Soon the young lambs will bleat across the combes,

And breezes will bring puffs of hawthorn scent Down Devon lanes; over the purple moors Lavrocks will carol and the plover cry,
The nesting peewit cry; on village greens Around the May-pole, while the moon hangs low,

The boys and girls of England merrily swing
In country footing through the flowery dance;
Roses return: I blame them not who stay,
I blame them not at all who cling to home.
For many of us indeed shall not return,
Nor ever know that sweetness any more.
But when our English clover once again Reddens round valleys thick with waving gold, Many beyond the faintest flush of dawn Shall sleep for ever in the cold green sea:

'Tis only we poor wandering prodigals That know the worth and wealth of heaven and home.

Bear with my weakness, for my heart is full Of yonder England, our sweet Ida mount, Mother of all our hopes and dreams and prayers;

Nor do I think a man needs be ashamed Whose eyes grow wet to leave his native
land;

For there is nought a man should hold more dear

Than his own country and his father's home."

Then the other with a laugh, "Nay, like the man

Who slept a hundred years we shall return And find our England strange: there are great storms

Brewing; God only knows what we shall find—

Perchance a Spanish king upon the throne!
What then?" And Drake, "I should put down my helm,
And out once more to the unknown golden West
To die, as I have lived, an Englishman." So said he, while the white cliffs dwindled
    down,
Faded, and vanished; but the prosperous
Carried the five ships onward over the swell
Of swinging, sweeping seas, till the sun sank, And height o'er height the chaos of the skies
Broke out into the miracle of the stars.
Frostily glittering, all the Milky Way Lay bare like diamond-dust upon the robe
Of some great king. Orion and the Plough Glimmered through drifting gulfs of silver fleece,

And, far away, in Italy, that night Young Galileo, looking upward, heard The self-same whisper through that wild abyss

Which now called Drake out to the unknown West.

But, after supper, Drake came up on deck With Doughty, and on the cold poop as they leaned

And gazed across the rolling gleam and

Of mighty muffled seas, began to give Voice to those lovely captives of the brain Which, like princesses in some forest-tower, Still yearn for the delivering prince, the sweet

Far bugle-note that calls from answering minds.

He told him how, in those dark days which now

Seemed like an evil dream, when the Princess Elizabeth even trembled for her life And read there, by the gleam of Smithfield fires,

Those cunning lessons of diplomacy Which saved her then and now for England's sake,

He passed his youth. 'Twas when the power of Rome

Began to light the gloom with that great glare

Of martyrdom which, while the stars endure, Bears witness how men overcame the world, Trod the red flames beneath their feet like flowers,

Yea, cast aside the blackening robe of flesh, While with a crown of joy upon their heads,

Even as into a palace, they passed through

The portals of the tomb to prove their love Stronger at least than death: and, in those days

A Puritan, with iron in his soul, Having in earlier manhood occupied His business in great waters and beheld
The bloody cowls of the Inquisition pass Before the midnight moon as he kept watch;
And having then forsworn the steely sea
To dwell at home in England with his love At Tavistock in Devon, Edmund Drake Began, albeit too near the Abbey walls,
To speak too staunchly for his ancient faith;
And with his young child Francis, had to flee

By night at last for shelter to the coast.
Little the boy remembered of that flight, Pillioned behind his father, save the clang
And clatter of the hoofs on stony ground

Striking a sharp blue fire, while country tales

Of highwaymen kindled his reckless heart
As the great steed went shouldering through the night.

There Francis, laying a little sunburnt

On the big holstered pistol at each side, " Dreamed with his wide grey eyes that he himself

Was riding out on some freebooting quest,
And felt himself heroic. League by league The magic world rolled past him as they rode,

Leaving him nothing but a memory
Of his own making. Vaguely he perceived A thousand meadows darkly 'streaming by With clouds of perfume from their secret
flowers,

A wayside cottage-window pointing out

A golden finger o'er the purple road ;
A puff of garden roses or a waft
Of honeysuckle blown along a wood, While overhead that silver ship, the moon, Sailed slowly down the gulfs of glittering stars,

Till, at the last, a buffet of fresh wind Fierce with sharp savours of the stinging brine

Against his dreaming face brought up a roar
Of mystic welcome from the Channel seas.
And there Drake paused for a moment, as a
song •

Stole o'er the waters from the Marygold
Where some musician, striking luscious chords Of sweet-stringed music, freed his heart's desire •

In symbols of the moment, which the rest,
And Doughty among them, scarce could understand.

SONG.

*The moon is up : the stars are bright :
The wind is fresh and free !
We're out to seek for gold to-night
Across the silver sea !
The world was growing grey and old :
Break out the sails again !
We're out to seek a Realm of Gold Beyond the Spanish Main.*

*We're sick of all the cringing knees,
The courtly smiles and lies !
God, let Thy singing Channel breeze Lighten our hearts and eyes !
Let love no more be bought and sold For earthly loss or gain :
We're out to seek an Age of Gold
Beyond the Spanish Main.*

*Beyond the light of far Cathay, Beyond all mortal dreams,
Beyond the reach of night and day
Our Eldorado gleams, Revealing—as the skies unfold—
A star without a stain,
The Glory of the Gates of Gold
Beyond the Spanish Main.*

And, as the skilled musician made the words Of momentary meaning still imply
His own eternal hope and heart's desire, Without belief, perchance, in Drake's own quest—

To Drake's own greater mind the eternal glory

Seemed to transfigure his immediate hope.

But Doughty only heard a sweet concourse

Of sounds. They ceased. And Drake resumed his tale

Of that strange flight in boyhood to the sea.

Next, the red-curtained inn and kindly hands Of Protestant Plymouth held his memory long;

Often in strange and distant dreams he saw That scene which now he tenderly pourtrayed To Doughty's half-ironic smiling lips, Half-sympathetic eyes; he saw again
That small inn parlour with the homely fare Set forth upon the table, saw the gang Of seamen reeking from the spray come in, Like great new thoughts to some 'adventurous brain.

Feeding his wide grey eyes he saw them stand

Around the crimson fire and stamp their feet And scatter the salt drops from their big sea-boots;

And all that night he lay awake and heard

Mysterious thunderings of eternal tides Moaning out of a cold and houseless gloom Beyond the world, that made it seem most sweet

To slumber in a little four-walled inn Immune from all that vastness. But at dawn

He awoke, he leapt from bed, he ran and lookt,

There, through the tiny high bright casement, there,—

Oh, fairy vision of that small boy's face Peeping at 'daybreak through the diamond pane!—

There first he saw the wondrous new-born
world,

And round its princely shoulders wildly flowing,

Gemmed with a myriad clusters of the sun,
The magic azure mantle of the sea.

And, afterwards, there came those marvellous

When, on that battleship, a disused hulk Rotting to death in Chatham Reach, they found

Sanctuary and a dwelling-place at last.

For Hawkins, that great ship-man, being their friend,

A Protestant, with power on Plymouth town, Nigh half whereof he owned, made Edmund
Drake

Reader of prayer to all the ships of war That lay therein. So there the dreaming boy,

Francis, grew up in that grim nursery Among the ropes and masts and great dumb mouths

Of idle ordnance. In that hulk he heard Many a time his father and his friends Over some wild-eyed troop of refugees

Thunder against the powers of Spain and Rome,

"Idolaters who defiled the House of God In England;" and all round them, as he heard,

The clang and clatter of shipwright hammers rang,

And hour by hour upon his vision rose,

In solid oak reality, new ships,

As Ilion rose to music, ships of war,

The visible shapes and symbols of his dream,

Unconscious yet, but growing as they grew,

A wondrous incarnation, hour by hour,

Till with their towering masts they stood complete,

Embodied thoughts, in God's own dockyards built,

For Drake ere long to lead against the
world.

There, as to round the tale with ringing gold,
Across the waters from the full-plumed Swan
The music of a Mermaid roundelay—
Our Lady of the Sea, a Dorian theme Tuned to the soul of England—charmed the moon.

SONG.

I.

Queen Venus wandered away with a cry,—
N'oserez vous, mon bel ami ?—
For the purple wound in Adon's thigh;
Je vous en prie, pity me ;
With a bitter farewell from sky to sky,
And a moan, a moan from sea to sea;
N'oserez vous, mon bel, mon bel,
N'oserez vous, mon bel ami ?

II.

The soft Ægean heard her sigh,—

N'oserez vous, mon bel ami?—

Heard the Spartan hills reply,

Je vous en prie, pity me;

Spain was aware of her drawing nigh

, Foot-gilt from the blossoms of Italy;

N'oserez vous, mon bel, mon bel,

N'oserez vous, mon bel ami?

III.

In France they heard her voice go by,—

And on the May-wind droop and die,

Je vous en prie, pity me;

Your maidens choose their loves, but I—

White as I came from the foam-white sea,

N'oserez vous, mon bel, mon bel,

N'oserez vous, mon bel ami?

IV.

The warm red-meal-winged butterfly,—

Beat on her breast in the golden rye,—

Je vous en prie, pity me,—

Stained her breast with a dusty dye

Red as the print of a kiss might be!

N'oserez vous, mon bel, mon bel,

N'oserez vous, mon bel ami?

V.

Is there no land, afar or nigh,—

N'oserez vous, mon bel ami?—

But dreads the kiss o' the sea? Ah, why—

Je vous en prie, pity me!—

Why will ye cling to the loves that die?

Is earth all Adon to my plea?

N'oserez vous, mon bel, mon bel,

N'oserez vous, mon bel ami?

VI.

Under the warm blue summer sky,—

N'erez vous, mon bel ami?—

With outstretched arms and a low long sigh,—

Je vous en prie, pity me;—

Over the Channel they saw her fly

To the white-cliffed island that crowns
the sea,

N'oserez vous, mon bel, mon bel,

N'oserez vous, mon bel ami?

VII.

England laughed as her queen drew nigh,—

N'ose z vous, mon bel ami?—

To the white-walled cottages gleaming high,

Je vous en prie, pity me!

They drew her in with a joyful cry

To the hearth where she sits with a babe on her knee,

She has turned her moan to a lullaby,

She is nursing a son to the kings of
the sea,

N'oserez vous, mon bel, mon bel,

N'oserez vous, mon bel ami ?

Such memories, on the plunging Golden
Hynde,

Under the stars, Drake drew before his friend

Doughty; but touched most briefly on his great

Voyage to Darien, and the famous Tree,
And those wild exploits down to Rio Grande Which even now had made his fierce renown Terrible to all lonely ships of Spain.

E'en now, indeed, that poet of Portugal,

Lope de Vega, filled with this new fear Began to meditate his epic muse Till, like a cry of panic from his lips, He shrilled the faint Dragontea forth, wherein Drake is that Dragon of the Apocalypse, The dread Antagonist of God and Man.

Well had it been for Doughty on that night Had he not heard what followed ; for, indeed, When two minds clash, not often does the less

Conquer the greater ; but, without one
thought

Of evil, seeing they now were safe at sea, Drake told him, only somewhat, yet too much,

Of that close conference with the Queen.
And lo,

The face of Doughty blanched with a slow
thought

That crept like a cold worm through all his brain,

“Thus much I knew, though secretly, before;

But here he freely tells me as his friend;
If I am false and he is what they say,
His knowledge of my knowledge will mean

But Drake looked round at Doughty with a smile

And said, “Forgive me now: thou art not used

To these cold nights at sea! thou tremblest,
friend;

Let us go down and drink a cup of sack
To our return!” And at that kindly smile Doughty shook off his nightmare mood, and
thought,

“I am no sea-dog, but a man of birth!
The yard-arm is for dogs, not gentlemen!

Even Drake would not misuse a man of birth ! ”

And in the cabin of the Golden Hynde

Revolving subtle treacheries he sat.

There with the sugared phrases of the court

And general sentiments which Drake believed

Were revelations of the man's own mind,

Bartering beads for gold, he drew out all

The simple Devon seaman's inmost heart,

And coiled up in the soul of Francis Drake.

There in the solemn night they interchanged

Lies for sweet confidences. From one wall

The picture of Drake's love looked down on him ;

And, like a bashful schoolboy's, that bronzed
face

Flushed as he blurted out with brightening
eyes

And quickening breath how he had seen her first,

Crowned on the village green, a Queen of May.

Her name, too, was Elizabeth, he said,
As if it proved that she, too, was a queen, Though crowned with milk-white Devon may alone,

And queen but of one plot of meadow-sweet.
As yet, he said, he had only kissed her
hand,

Smiled in her eyes and—there Drake also blanched,

Thinking, "I ne'er may see her face again,"
And Doughty comforted his own dark heart Thinking, "I need not fear so soft a soul As this"; and yet, he wondered how the
man,

Seeing his love so gripped him, none the less

Could leave her, thus to follow after dreams;
For faith to Doughty was an unknown word,

And trustfulness the property of fools.
At length they parted, each to his own couch,
Doughty with half a chuckle, Francis Drake
With one old-fashioned richly grateful prayer Blessing all those he loved, as he had learnt Beside his mother's knee in Devon days.

So all night long they sailed; but when a rift
Of orchard crimson broke the yellowing
gloom
And barred the closely clouded East with dawn,
Behold, a giant galleon overhead,
Lifting its huge black shining sides on high, Loomed like some misty monster of the deep:
And, sullenly rolling out great gorgeous folds Over her rumbled like a thunder-cloud
The heavy flag of Spain. The splendid poop,

Mistily lustrous as a dragon's hoard Seen in some magic cave-mouth o'er the sea Through shimmering April sunlight after rain, Blazed to the morning; 'and her port-holes grinned
With row on row of cannon. There at once One sharp shrill whistle sounded, and those five Small ships, mere minnows clinging to the flanks
Of that Leviathan, unseen, unheard, Undreamt of, grappled her. She seemed asleep, Swinging at ease with great half-slackened sails, Majestically careless of the dawn.
There in the very native seas of Spain,
There with the yeast and foam of her proud cliffs,

Her own blue coasts, in sight across the
waves,

Up her Titanic sides without a sound
The naked-footed British seamen swarmed With knives between their teeth: then on her decks

They dropped like panthers, and the softly fierce

Black-bearded watch of Spaniards, all amazed, Rubbing their eyes as if at a wild dream, Upraised a sudden shout, El Draque! El
Draque!

And flashed their weapons out, but all too late;

For, ere their sleeping comrades reached the deck,

The little watch, out-numbered and out-matched,

Lay bound, and o'er the hatches everywhere
The points of naked cutlasses on guard

Gleamed, and without a struggle those below Gave up their arms, their poignards jewelled thick

With rubies, and their blades of Spanish steel.

Then onward o'er the great grey gleaming sea They swept with their rich booty, night and day.

Five other prizes, one for every ship,
Out of the seas of Spain they suddenly caught
And carried with them, laughing as they went—

“Now, now indeed the Rubicon is crossed; Now have we singed the eyelids and the beard

Of Spain; now have we roused the hornet's nest;

Now shall we sail against a world in arms;

Now we have nought between us and black
death

But our own hands, five ships, and three score guns."

So laughed they, plunging through the bay of storms,

Biscay, and past Gibraltar, not yet clothed With British thunder, though, as one might
dream,

Gazing in dim prophetic grandeur out Across the waves while that small fleet went by,

Or watching them with love's most wistful fear

As they plunged Southward to the lonely coasts

Of Africa, till right in front up-soared, Tremendous over ocean, Teneriffe, Cloud-robed, but crowned with colours of the dawn.

Already those two traitors were at work, Doughty and his false brother, among the crews,

Who knew not yet the vastness of their quest, Nor dreamed of aught 'beyond the accustomed world;

For Drake had kept it secret, and the thoughts

Of some that he had shipped before the mast

Set sail scarce farther than for Mogadore In West Morocco, or at the utmost mark For northern Egypt, by the midnight woods And crystal palace roofed with chrysoprase Where Prester John had reigned five hundred years,

And Sydon, river of jewels, through the dark Enchanted gorges rolled its rays along!

Some thought of Rio Grande; but scarce to ten

The true intent was known ; while to divert The rest from care the skilled musicians played.

But those two Doughtys cunningly devised By chance-dropt 'words to breathe a hint abroad ;

And through the foc'sles crept a grisly fear Of things that lay beyond the bourne of
earth,

Till even those hardy seamen almost quailed ;
And now, at any moment, they might turn With terror in their eyes. They might refuse

To sail into that fabled burning Void Or brave that primum mobile which drew O'er-daring ships into the jaws of hell Beyond the Pole Antarticke, where the sea Rushed down through fiery mountains, and no sail

Could e'er return against its roaring stream.

Now down the coast of Barbary they cruised Till Christmas Eve embraced them in the heart

Of summer. In a bay of mellow calm They moored, and as the fragrant twilight brought

The stars, the sound of song and dance arose;

And down the shores in stealthy silence
crept,

Out of the massy forest's emerald gloom, The naked, dark-limbed children of the
night,

Unseen, to gaze upon the floating glare
Of revelry; unheard, to hear that strange New music of the gods, where o'er the soft

Ripple and wash of the lanthorn-crimsoned tide

Will Harvest's voice above the chorus rang.

SONG.

*In Devonshire, now, the Christmas chime Is carolling over the lea ;
And the sexton-shovels away the snow
From the old church porch, maybe ;
And the waits with their lanthorns and noses a-glow
Come round for their Christmas fee ;
But, as in old England it's Christmas-time,
Why, so is it here at sea,
My lads,
Why, so is it here at sea !*

*When the ship comes home, from turret to poop Filled full with Spanish gold, There'll be many a country dance and joke,
And many a tale to be told ;
Every old woman shall have a red cloak
To fend her against the cold ;*

*And every old man shall have a big round stoup Of jolly good ale and old,
My lads,
Jolly good ale and old !*

But on the morrow came a prosperous wind Whereof they took advantage, and shook out
The flashing sails, and held their Christmas feast Upon the swirling ridges of the sea :
And, sweeping Southward with full many a rouse
And shout of laughter, at the fall of day, While the black prows drove, leapt, and plunged, and ploughed Through the broad dazzle of sunset-coloured tides,
Outside the cabin of the Golden Hynde, Where Drake and his chief captains dined in state,
The skilled musicians made a great new song.

SONG.

I.

Happy by the hearth sit the lasses and the lads, now, Roasting of their chestnuts, toasting of their toes !

When the door is opened to a blithe new-comer, Stamping like a ploughman to shuffle off the snows ;

*Rosy flower-like faces through the soft red fire-
light*

Float as if to greet us, far away at sea, Sigh as they remember, and turn the sigh to laughter,

Kiss beneath the mistletoe and wonder at their glee.

With their " heigh ho, the holly !

This life is most jolly ! "

Christmas-time is kissing-time ;

Away with melancholy !

II.

Ah, the Yule of England, the happy Yule of England,

*Yule of berried holly and the merry mistletoe ;
The boar's head, the brown ale, the blue snapdragon, Yule of groaning tables and the crimson log aglow !*

Yule, the golden bugle to the scattered old companions,

Ringin' as with laughter, shining as through tears !

Loved of little children, oh guard the holy Yuletide,

Guard it, men of England, for the child beyond the years.

With its "heigh ho, the holly !"

Away with melancholy !

Christmas-time is kissing-time,

"This life is most jolly !"

Now to the Fortunate Islands of old time
They came, and found no glory as of old Encircling them, no red ineffable calm Of sunset round crowned faces pale with bliss Like evening stars; but rugged, waste, and wild

Those isles were when they neared them, though afar

They beautifully smouldered in the sun
Like dusky purple jewels fringed and frayed With silver foam across that ancient sea Of wonder. On the largest of the seven Drake landed Doughty with his musketeers To exercise their weapons and to seek Supplies among the matted uncouth huts Which, as the ships drew round each ragged cliff,

Crept like remembered misery into sight;
Oh, like the strange dull waking from a

They blotted out the rosy courts and fair Imagined marble thresholds of the King Achilles and the heroes that were gone.
But Drake cared nought for these things.

Such a heart

He had, to make each utmost ancient bourne Of man's imagination but a point Of new departure for his Golden Dream.
But Doughty with his men ashore, alone, Among the sparse wind-bitten groves of palm,

Kindled their fears of all they must endure On that immense adventure. Nay, sometimes He hinted of a voyage far beyond All history and fable, far beyond Even that Void whence only two returned,— Columbus, with his men in mutiny; Magellan, who could only hound his crew Onward by threats of death, until they turned

In horror from the Threat that lay before, Preferring to be hanged as mutineers Rather than venture farther. Nor indeed Did even Magellan at the last return;
But, with all hell a'round him, in the clutch
Of devils d'ied upon some savage isle By poisonous black enchantment. Not in vain

Were Doughty's words on that volcanic shore

Among the stunted dark acacia trees, Whose heads, all bent one way by the trade-wind,
Pointed North-east by North, South-west by West,

Ambiguous sibyls that with wizened arms Mysteriously declared a twofold path, Homeward or onward. But aboard the ships, Among the hardier seamen, old Tom Moone,
With one or two stout comrades, overbore

All doubts and questionings with blither tales Of how they sailed to Darien and heard Nightingales in November all night long As down a coast like Paradise they cruised Through seas of lasting summer, Eden isles, Where birds like rainbows, butterflies like
    gems,
And flowers like coloured fires o'er 'fairy creeks Floated and flashed beneath the shadowy palms;
While ever and anon a bark canoe
With naked Indian maidens flower-festooned Put out from shadowy coves, laden with fruit Ambrosial o'er the silken shimmering sea.
And once a troop of nut-brown maidens came—
So said Tom Moone, a twinkle in his eye—Swimming to meet them through the warm blue waves

And wantoned through the water, like those nymphs

Which one green April at the Mermaid Inn
He heard Kit Marlowe mightily pourtray, Among his boon companions, in a song Of Love that swam the sparkling Hellespont Upheld by nymphs, not lovelier than these,— Though whiter yet not lovelier than these;
For those like flowers, but these like rounded fruit

Rosily ripening through the clear tides tossed From nut-brown breast and arm all round the ship

The thousand-coloured spray. Shapely of limb

They were; but as they laid their small brown hands

Upon the ropes we cast them, Captain Drake Suddenly thundered at them and bade them pack

For a troop of naughty wenches! At that tale

A tempest of fierce laughter rolled around The foc'sle; but one boy from London town,
A pale-faced prentice, run-away to sea, Asking why Drake had bidden them pack so soon,

Tom Moone turned to him with his deep-sea growl,

"Because our Captain is no pink-eyed boy Nor soft-limbed Spaniard, but a staunch-souled Man,

Full-blooded; nerved like iron; with a girl
He loves at home in Devon; and a mind
For ever bent upon some mighty goal,
I know not what—but 'tis enough for me To know my Captain knows." And then he told

How sometimes o'er the gorgeous forest
gloom

Some marble city, rich, mysterious, white,
An ancient treasure-house of Aztec kings,
Or palace of forgotten Incas gleamed;
And in their dim rich lofty cellars gold, Beyond all wildest' dreams, great bars of
gold, ,

Like pillars, tossed in mighty chaos, gold
And precious stones, agate and emerald, Diamond, sapphire, ruby, and sardonyx.
So said he, as they waited the return Of Doughty, resting in the foc'sle gloom, Or idly couched about the sun-swept decks On sails or coils of rope, while overhead Some boy would climb the rigging and look out,

Arching his hand to see if Doughty came.
But when he came, he came with a strange
face
Of feigned despair; and with a stammering
tongue

He vowed he could not find those poor supplies

Which Drake himself in other days had found

Upon that self-same island. But, perchance, This was a barren year, he said. And Drake Looked at him, suddenly, and at the musketeers. •

Their eyes were strained; their faces wore a cloud.

That night he said no more; but on the morn,

Mistrusting nothing, Drake with subtle sense
Of weather-wisdom, through that little fleet Distributed his crews anew. And all

The prisoners and the prizes at those isles They left behind them, taking what they would

From out their carven cabins,—glimmering silks,

Chiselled Toledo blades, and broad doubloons.
And lo, as they weighed anchor, far away Behind them on the blue horizon line
It seemed a city of towering masts arose;
And from the crow's nest of the Golden
Hynde ,

A seaman cried, "By God; the hunt is up!"

And like a tide of triumph through their veins

The red rejoicing blood began to race As there they saw the avenging ships of Spain,

Eight mighty galleons, nosing out their trail.
And Drake growled, "Oh, my lads of Bideford,

It cuts my heart to show the hounds our heels;

But we must not emperil our great quest!
Such fights as that must wait—as our reward

When we return. Yet I will not put on One stitch of sail. So, lest they are not too slow

To catch us, clear the decks. God, I would like

To fight them!" So the little fleet advanced With decks all cleared and shotted guns and
men

Bare-armed beside them, hungering to be caught,

And quite distracted from their former doubts;

For danger, in that kind, they never feared.
But soon the heavy Spaniards dropped behind;

And not in vain had Thomas Doughty sown
The seeds of doubt; for many a brow grew black

With sullen-seeming care that erst was gay.
But happily and in good time there came,

Not from behind them now, but right in front,

On the first sun-down of their quest renewed,
Just as the sea grew dark around their ships,
A chance that-loosed heart-gnawing doubt in deeds.

For through a mighty zone of golden haze Blotting the purple of the gathering night
A galleon like a floating mountain moved To meet them, clad with sunset and with dreams.

Her masts and spars immense in jewelled mist Shimmered: her rigging, like an emerald web Of golden spiders, tangled half the stars!
Embodied sunset, dragging the soft sky O'er dazzled ocean, through the night she drew

Out of the unknown lands; and round a prow

That jutted like a moving promontory

Over a cloven wilderness of foam, Upon a lofty blazoned scroll her name
San Salvador challenged obsequious isles Where'er she rode; who kneeling like dark slaves

Before some great Sultàn must lavish forth From golden cornucopias, East and West, Red streams of rubies, cataracts of pearl.
But, at a signal from their admiral, all Those five small ships lay silent in the
gloom

Which, just as if some god were on their side, Covered them in the dark troughs of the
waves,

Letting her pass to leeward. On she came,
Blazing with lights, a City of the Sea, Belted with crowding towers and clouds of
sail,

And round her bows a long-drawn thunder rolled

Splendid with foam; but ere she passed them by

Drake gave the word, and with one crimson flash

Two hundred yards' of black and hidden sea Leaped into sight between them as the roar Of twenty British cannon shattered the night.
Then after her they drove, like black sea-wolves

Behind some royal high-branched stag of ten, Hanging upon those bleeding foam-flecked
flanks,

Leaping, snarling, worrying, as they went In full flight down the wind; for those light ships

Much speedier than their huge antagonist, Keeping to windward, worked their will with her.

In vain she burnt wild lights and strove to scan

The darkening deep. Her musketeers in vain Provoked the crackling night with random
fires:

In vain her broadside bellowings burst at large

As if the Gates of Erebus unrolled.

For ever and anon the deep-sea gloom

From some new quarter, like a dragon's mouth

Opened and belched forth crimson flames and tore

Her sides as if with iron claws unseen;

Till, all at once, rough voices close at hand

Out of the darkness thundered, "Grapple her!"

And, falling on their knees, the Spaniards
knew

The Dragon of that red Apocalypse.

There with one awful cry, El Draque! El Draque!

They cast their weapons from them; for the moon

Rose, eastward, and against her rising black Over the bloody bulwarks Francis Drake, Grasping the great hilt of his naked sword, Towered for a moment to their startled eyes Through all the zenith like the King of Hell.
Then he leaped down upon their shining decks,

And after him swarmed and towered and leapt in haste

A brawny band of three score Englishmen, Gigantic as they loomed against the sky
And risen, it seemed, by miracle from the sea.
So small were those five ships below the walls Of that huge floating mountain. Royally Drake, from the swart commander's trembling hands

Took the surrendered sword, and bade his men

Gather the fallen weapons on an heap, And placed a guard about them, while the moon

Silvering the rolling seas for many a mile Glanced on the huddled Spaniards' rich attire,

As like one picture of despair they grouped Under the splintered main-mast's creaking shrouds,

And the great swinging shadows of the sails Mysteriously swept the gleaming decks;
Where many a butt of useless cannon gloomed

Along the accoutred bulwarks or upturned,
As the ship wallowed in the heaving deep,
Dumb mouths of empty menace to the stars.

Then Drake appointed Doughty, with a guard,

To sail the prize on to the next dim isle

Where they might leave her, taking aught they would

From out her carven cabins and rich holds.
And Doughty's heart leaped in him as he
thought, .

"I have my chance at last"; but Drake, who still

Trusted the man, made surety doubly sure,
And in his wary weather-wisdom sent —Even as a breathing type of friendship, sent—

His brother, Thomas Drake, aboard the prize;

But set his brother, his own flesh and blood, Beneath the man, as if to say, "I give My loyal friend dominion over me."

So courteously he dealt with him; but he,
Seeing his chance once more slipping away, Raged inwardly and, from his own false
heart

Imputing his own evil, he contrived A cunning charge that night; and when they came

Next day, at noon, upon the destined isle,
He suddenly spat the secret venom forth,
With such fierce wrath in his defeated soul
That he himself almost believed the charge.
For when Drake stepped on the San Salvador

To order all things duly about the prize,
What booty they must keep and what let go, Doughty received him with a blustering voice Of red mock-righteous wrath, "Is this the way Englishmen play the pirate, Francis Drake?
While thou wast dreaming of thy hero's
crown—

God save the mark!—thy brother, nay, thy spy,

Must play the common pilferer, must convert The cargo to his uses, rob us all

Of what we risked our necks to win: he wears

The ransom of an emperor round his throat That might enrich us all. Who saw him wear

That chain of rubies ere last night?"

And Drake,

"Answer him, brother;" and his brother
smiled

And answered, "Nay, I never wore this chain Before last night; but Doughty knows, indeed,

For he was with me—and none else was there

But Doughty,—'tis my word against his
word,

That close on midnight we were summoned
down

To an English seaman who lay dying below Unknown to any of us, a prisoner

In chains, that had been captured none knew where,

For all his mind was far from Darien,
And wandering evermore through Devon lanes At home; whom we released; and from his waist

He took this hidden chain and gave it me, Begging me that if ever I returned To Bideford in Devon I would go With whatsoever wealth it might produce To his old mother who, with wrinkled hands In some small white-washed cottage o'er the
sea,

Where wall-flowers bloom in April, even now Is turning pages of the well-worn Book And praying for her son's return, nor knows That he lies cold upon the heaving main.
But this he asked; and this in all good faith
I swore to do; and even now he died,
And hurrying hither from his side I clasped

His chain of rubies round my neck awhile, In full sight of the sun. I have no more To say." Then up spoke Hatton's trumpeter :
"But I have more to say. Last night I saw Doughty, but not in full sight of the sun, Nor once, nor twice, but three times at the least,

Carrying chains of gold, clusters of gems,
And whatsoever wealth he could convey Into his cabin and smuggle in smallest space" "Nay," Doughty stammered, mixing sneer and lie,

Yet bolstering up his courage with the thought That being what courtiers called a gentleman He ranked above the rude sea-discipline,
"Nay, they were free gifts from the Spanish
crew

Because I treated them with courtesy." Then bluff Will Harvest, "That perchance were true,

For he hath been close closeted for hours
With their chief officers, drinking their health In our own war-bought wine, while down below

Their captured English seaman groaned his last."

Then Drake, whose utter silence, with a sense Of infinite power and justice, ruled 'their hearts,

Suddenly thundered—and the traitor blanched And quailed before him. "This my flesh and blood

I placed beneath thee as my dearer self!
But thou, in trampling on him, shalt not say I charge thy brother. Nay, thou chargest me!

Against me only hast thou stirred this strife;
And now, by God, shalt thou learn, once for all,

That I, thy captain for this voyage, hold

BOOK II.

The supreme power of judgment in my hands.

Get thee aboard my flagship! When I come
I shall have more to say to thee; but thou,
My brother, take this galleon in thy charge;
For, as I see, she holdeth all the stores Which Doughty failed to find. She shall return

With us to that New World from which she came.

But now let these our prisoners all embark In yonder pinnace; let them all go free.
I care not to be cumbered on my way Through dead Magellan's unattempted dream With chains and prisoners. In that Golden
World

Which means much more to me than I can speak,

Much more, much more than I can speak or breathe,

Being, behind whatever name it bears—
Earthly Paradise, Island of the Saints, Cathay, or Zipangu, or Hy Brasil—
The eternal symbol of my soul's desire,
A sacred country shining 'on the sea,
That Vision without which, the wise king said,

A people perishes; in that place of hope,
That Tirn'an Og, that land of lasting youth, Where whosoever sails with me shall drink Fountains of immortality and dwell Beyond the fear of death for evermore,
There shall we see the dust of battle dance Everywhere in the sunbeam of God's peace!
Oh, in the new Atlantis of my soul
There are no captives: there the wind blows free;

And, as in sleep, I have heard the marching
song

Of mighty peoples rising in the West,

Wonderful cities that shall set their foot Upon the throat of all old tyrannies ;
And on the West wind I have heard a cry,
The shoreless cry of the prophetic sea Heralding through that golden wilderness The Soul whose path our task is to make straight,
Freedom, the last great Saviour of mankind.
I know not what I know: these are wild words,
Which as the sun draws out earth's morning mists
Over dim fields where careless cattle sleep,
Some visionary Light, unknown, afar, Draws from my darkling soul. Why should we drag Thither this Old-World weight of utter
gloom,
Or with the ballast of these heavy hearts Make sail in sorrow for Pacific Seas?

Let us leave chains and prisoners to Spain;
But set these free to make their own way home!"

So said he, groping blindly towards the truth,
And heavy with the treason of his friend.
His face was like a king's face as he spake,
For sorrows that strike deep reveal the deep;
And through the gateways of a ragged wound.
Sometimes a god will drive his chariot wheels From some deep heaven within the hearts of men.

Nevertheless, the immediate seamen there Knowing how great a ransom they might ask For some among their prisoners, men of wealth

And high degree, scarce liked to free them
thus;

And only saw in Drake's conflicting moods The moment's whim. "For little will he care,'

They muttered, "when we reach those fabled shores,

Whether his cannon break their golden peace."

Yet to his face they murmured not at all;
Because his eyes compelled them like a law.
So there they freed the prisoners and set sail Across the earth-shaking shoulders of the broad

Atlantic, and the great grey slumbrous waves Triumphantly swelled up to meet the keels.

BOOK III.

Now in the cabin of the Golden Hynde At dusk, Drake sent for Doughty. From one wall

The picture of his love looked down on him;
And on the table lay the magic chart, Drawn on a buffalo horn, all small peaked isles,

Dwarf promontories, tiny twisted creeks,
And fairy harbours under elfin hills,
With marvellous inscriptions lined in red,— As Here is Gold, or Many Rubies Here, Or Ware Witch-craft, or Here is Cannibals.
For in his great simplicity the man Delighted in it, with the adventurous heart

Of boyhood poring o'er some well-thumbed
tale

On blue Twelfth Night beside the crimson
fire;

And o'er him, like the vision of a boy In his first knighthood when, upon some hill

Washed by the silver fringes of the sea, Amidst the purple heather he lies and reads Of Arthur and Avilion, like a star His love's pure face looked down. There Doughty came,

Half fearful, half defiant, with a crowd
Of jostling half-excuses on his lips,
And one dark swarm of adders in his heart.
For now what light of chivalry remained In Doughty's mind was thickening with a plot,

Subtler and deadlier than the serpent's first Attempt on our first sire in Eden bower.

Drake, with a countenance open as the sun, Received him, saying: "Forgive me, friend, for I

Was hasty with thee. I wellnigh forgot Those large and liberal nights we two have passed

In this old cabin, telling all our dreams
And hopes, in friendship, o'er and o'er again.
But Vicary, thy lawyer friend, hath been Pleading with me; and now I understand All; so forgive,—for thou art hasty too,
And hast said things in passion which, 'fore
God,

I would not take from other men alive.
But now—I understand. Thou shalt no more Be vexed with a divided mastership.
Indeed, I trust thee, Doughty; against all Appearances I trust thee. Wilt thou not Be friends with me? For now in ample proof

Thou shalt take charge of this my *Golden
Hynde*

In all things, save of seamanship, which rests With the ship's master under my command.
But I myself will sail upon the prize."

And with the word he gathered up the chart, Took down his lady's picture with a smile, Gripped Doughty's hand and left him, staring, sheer

Bewildered with that magnanimity Of faith, throughout all shadows, in some light

Unseen behind the shadows. Thus did Drake Give up his own fair cabin which he loved;
Being, it seemed, a little travelling home, Fragrant with memories,—gave it, as he
thought,

In recompense to one whom he had wronged.
For even as his mind must ever yearn To shores beyond the sunset, even so

He yearned through all dark shadows to his
friend,

And with his greater nature striving still To comprehend the lesser, as the sky Embraces our low earth, he would adduce Justifications, thus: "These men of law Are trained to plead for any and every cause, To feign an indignation, or to prove The worse is better and that black is white!
Small wonder that their passion goes astray:
Ah God, there is one prayer for all of us—Enter not into judgment with Thy servant!"

Yet as his boat pulled tow'rd the Spanish

Leaving the Golden Hynde, far off he heard A voice that chilled him, 'as the voice of

Crying like some old Bellman through the world.

SONG.

*Yes ; oh, yes ; if any seek Laughter flown or lost delight, Glancing eye or rosy cheek,
Love shall claim his own to-night !
Say, hath any lost a friend ?
Yes ; oh, yes !
Let his distress
In my ditty find its end.*

*Yes ; oh, yes ; here all is found !
Kingly palaces await Each its rightful owner, crowned King and consecrate,
Under the wet and wintry ground !
Yes ; oh, yes !
There sure redress Lies where all is lost and found.*

And Doughty, though Drake's deed of kindness flashed

A moment's kind contrition through his heart,

Immediately, with all his 'lawyer's wit

True to the cause that hired him, laughed it by,

And straight began to weave the treacherous web

Of soft intrigue wherein he meant to snare

The passions of his comrades. Night and day,

As that small fleet drove onward o'er the deep,

Cleaving the sunset with their bright black prows

Or hunted by the red pursuing Dawn,

He stirred between the high-born gentlemen (Whose white and jewelled hands, gallant in fight,

And hearts remembering Creçy and Poitiers, Were of scant use in common seamanship), Between these and the men whose rough tarred arms

Were good at equal need in storm or war
Yet took a poorer portion of the prize, He stirred a subtle jealousy and fanned
A fire that swiftly grew almost to hate.

For when the seamen must take precedence Of loiterers on the deck—through half a
word,

Small, with intense device, like some fierce lens,

He magnified their rude and blustering mode;
Or urged some scented fop, whose idle brain Busied itself with momentary whims,
To bid the master alter here a sail,
Or there a rope; and, if the man refused, Doughty, at night, across the wine-cups, raved Against the rising insolence of the mob;

And hinted Drake himself was half to blame, In words that seemed to say, "I am his
friend,

Or I should bid you think him all to blame."
So fierce indeed the strife became that once, While Chester, Doughty's catspaw, played with fire,

The grim ship-master growled between his teeth,

"Remember, sir, remember, ere too late, Magellan's mutinous vice-admiral's end."

And Doughty heard, and with a boisterous
laugh

Slapped the old sea-dog on the back and said,
"The gallows are for dogs, not gentlemen!"

Meanwhile his brother, sly John Doughty, sought

To fan the seamen's fear of the unknown
world

With whispers and conjectures; and, at night,

He brought old books of Greek and Hebrew
down

Into the foc'sle, claiming by their aid
A knowledge of Black Art, and power to tell The future, which he dreadfully displayed
There in the flickering light of the oily lamp, Bending above their huge and swarthy palms
And tracing them to many a grisly doom.

So many a night and day westward they plunged.

The half-moon ripened to its mellow round, Dwindled again and ripened yet again.
And there was nought around them but the grey

Ruin and roar of huge Atlantic seas.

And only like a memory of the world

They left behind them rose the same great sun,
And daily rolled his chariot through their sky, Whereof the skilled musicians made a song.

SONG.

The same sun is o'er us,
The same Love shall find us,
The same and none other,
Wherever we be;
With the same goal before us,
The same home behind us,
England, our mother,
Ringed round with the sea.

When the breakers charged thundering In thousands all round us
With a lightning of lances Uphurtled on high,
When the stout ships were sundering
A rapture hath crowned us,
Like the wild light that dances On the crests that flash by.

When the waters lay breathless Gazing at Hesper
Guarding the golden Fruit of the tree,
Heard we the deathless Wonderful whisper
Wafting the olden Dream of the sea.

No land in the ring of it Now, all around us
Only the splendid Resurging unknown!
How should we sing of it?—
This that hath found us
By the great sun attended In splendour, alone.

Ah! the broad miles of it,
White with the onset Of waves without number Warring for glee.

Ah! the soft smiles of it Down to the sunset, Holy for slumber,
The peace of the sea.

The wave's heart, exalted,
Leaps forward to meet us,
The sun on the sea-wave Lies white as the moon:
The soft sapphire-vaulted Deep heaven smiles to greet us, Free sons of the free-wave
All singing one tune.

*The same sun is o'er us,
The same Love shall find us,
The same and none other,
Wherever we be ;
With the same goal before us,
The same home behind us,
England, our mother,
Queen of the sea.*

At last a faint-flushed April Dawn arose With milk-white arms up-binding golden
clouds
Of fragrant hair behind her lovely head ;
And lo, before the bright black plunging prows
The whole sea suddenly shattered into shoals Of rolling porpoises. Everywhere they tore The glittering water. Like a moving crowd Of black bright rocks washed smooth by foaming tides,

They thrilled the unconscious fancy of the crews

With subtle, wild, and living hints of land.
And soon Columbus' happy signals came,
The signs that saved him when his mutineers Despaired at last and clamoured to return,—
And there, with awe triumphant in their eyes,
They saw, lazily tossing on the tide, ‘
A drift of seaweed and a berried branch, Which silenced them as if they had seen a Hand

Writing with fiery letters on the deep.
Then a black cormorant, vulture of the sea,
With neck outstretched and one long ominous
honk,
Went hurtling past them to its unknown bourne.

A mighty white-winged albatross came next;
Then flight on flight of clamorous clanging gulls;

And last, a wild and sudden shout of “Land!”

Echoed from crew to crew across the waves.
Then, dumb upon the rigging as they hung Staring at it, a menace chilled their blood.
For like Il Gran Nemico of Dante, dark, Ay, coloured like a thunder-cloud, from North To South, in front, there slowly rose to sight
A country like a dragon fast asleep Along the West, with wrinkled, purple wings Ending in ragged forests o'er its spine;
And with great craggy claws out-thrust, that turned

(As the dim distances dissolved their veils)
To promontories bounding a huge bay.
There o'er the hushed and ever shallower tide
The staring ships drew nigh and thought, “Is this

The Dragon of our Golden Apple Tree,
The guardian of the fruit of our desire

Which grows in gardens of the Hesperides Where those three sisters weave a white-armed dance

Around it everlastingly, and sing Strange songs in a strange tongue that still convey Warning to heedful souls?" Nearer they drew,

And now, indeed, from out a soft blue-grey Mingling of colours on that coast's deep flank
There crept a garden of enchantment, height O'er height, a garden sloping from the hills, Wooded as with Aladdin's trees that bore
All-coloured clustering gems instead of fruit;
Now vaster as it grew upon their eyes,
And like some Roman amphitheatre Cirque above mighty cirque all round the bay, With jewels and flowers ablaze on women's breasts

Innumerably confounded and confused;

While lovely faces flushed with lust of blood, Rank above rank upon their tawny thrones In soft barbaric splendour lapped, and lulled
By the low thunderings of a thousand lions, Luxuriously smiled as they bent down Over the scarlet-splashed and steaming sands
To watch the white-limbed gladiators die.

Such fears and dreams for Francis Drake, at least,
Rose and dissolved in his nigh fevered brain
As they drew near that equatorial shore;
For rumours had been borne to him; and now
He knew not whether to impute the wrong
To his untrustful mind or to believe Doughty a traitorous liar; for the sense Of his own friendship towards him made it hard To understand that treachery; yet there seemed

Proof and to spare. A thousand shadows rose To mock him with their veiled indicative hands.

And each alone he laid and exorcised
With ease; but ah, not all, not all at once.
And for each doubt he banished, one returned From darker depths to mock him o'er again.

So, in that bay, the little fleet sank sail
And anchored; and the wild reality Behind those dreams towered round them on the hills,

Or so it seemed. And Drake bade lower a boat,

And went ashore with sixteen men to seek Water; and, as they neared the embowered beach,

Over the green translucent tide there came,
A hundred yards from land, a drowsy sound Immeasurably repeated and prolonged,

As of innumerable elfin drums Dreamily mustering in the tropic bloom.
This from without they heard, across the
waves;

But when they glided into a flowery creek Under the sharp black shadows of the trees—Jaca and Mango and Palm and red festoons Of garlanded Liana wreaths—it ebbed
Into the murmur of the mighty fronds, Prodigious leaves whose veinings bore the fresh

Impression of the finger-prints of God.
There humming-birds, like flakes of purple
fire

Upon some passing seraph's plumage, beat
And quivered in blinding blots of golden light Between the embattled cactus and cardoon;
While one huge whisper of primeval awe Seemed to await the cool green eventide
When God should walk His Garden as of old.

Now as the boats were plying to and fro Between the ships and that enchanted shore, Drake bade his comrades tarry a little and
went

Apart, alone, into the trackless woods.
Tormented with his thoughts, he saw all
round

Once more the battling image of his mind, Where there was nought of man, only the vast Unending silent struggle of Titan trees, Large internecine twistings of the world,
The hushed death-grapple and the still intense Locked anguish of Laocoons that gripped Death by the throat for thrice three hundred years.

Once, like a subtle mockery overhead, Some black-armed chattering ape swung swiftly by,
But he strode onward, thinking—"Was it false,

False all that kind outreaching of the hands?

False? Was there nothing certain, nothing sure

In those divinest aisles and towers of Time Wherein we took sweet counsel? Is there nought

Sure but the solid dust beneath our feet?
Must all those lovelier fabrics of the soul,
Being so divinely bright and delicate,
Waver and shine no longer than some poor Prismatic aery bubble? Ay, they burst,
And all their glory shrinks into one tear
No bitterer than some idle love-lorn maid Sheds for her dead canary. God, it hurts, This, this hurts most, to think how we must miss

What might have been, for nothing but a breath,

A babbling of the tongue, an argument,

Or such a poor contention as involves The thrones and dominations of this earth,— How many of us, like seed on barren ground, Must miss the flower and harvest of their prayers,
The living light of friendship and the grasp Which for its very meaning once implied Eternities of utterance and the life • Immortal of two souls beyond the grave?"

Now, wandering upward ever, he reached and clomb
The slope side of a fern-fringed precipice,
And, at the summit, found an open glade, Whence, looking o'er the forest, he beheld
The sea; and, in the land-locked bay below, Far, far below, his elfin-tiny ships,
All six at anchor on the crawling tide!
Then onward, upward, through the woods once more

He plunged with bursting heart and burning brow ;
And, once again, like madness, the black shapes
Of doubt swung through his brain and chattered and laughed, Till he upstretched his arms in agony And cursed the name of Doughty, cursed the day
They met, cursed his false face and courtier
smiles ;
“ For oh,” he cried, “ how easy a thing it were For truth to wear the garb of truth ! This proves His treachery ! ” And there, at once, his thoughts
Tore him another way, as thus, “ And yet
If he were false, is he not subtle enough To hide it ? Why, this proves his innocence—

This very courtly carelessness which I, Black-hearted evil-thinker as I am,
In my own clumsier spirit so misjudge!
These children of the court are butterflies Fluttering hither and thither, and I—poor fool—

Would fix them to a stem and call them
flowers,

Nay, bid them grasp the ground like towering oaks

And shadow all the zenith;" and yet again
The madness of distrustful friendship gleamed From his fierce eyes, "Oh villain, damnèd villain,

God's murrain on his heart! I know full well He hides what he can hide! He wears no fault

Upon the gloss and frippery of his breast!
It is not that! It is the hidden things, Unseizable, the things I do not know,

Ay, it is these, these, these and these alone
That I mistrust."

And, as he walked, the skies Grew full of threats, and now enormous clouds Rose mammoth-like above the ensanguined
deep, •

Trampling the daylight out; and, with its death

Dyed purple, rushed along as if they meant To obliterate the world. He took no heed.
Though that strange blackness brimmed the branching aisles

With horror, he strode on till in the gloom, Just as his winding way came out once more Over a precipice that o'erlooked the bay,
There, as he went, not gazing down, but up,
He saw what seemed a ponderous granite cliff,
A huge ribbed shell upon a lonely shore Left by forgotten mountains when they sank Back to earth's breast like billows on a sea.

A tall and whispering crowd of tree-ferns waved

Mysterious fringes round it. In their midst He flung himself at its broad base, with one Sharp shivering cry of pain, "Show me Thy ways,

O God, teach me Thy paths! I am in the dark!

Lighten my darkness!"

Almost as he spoke
There swept across the forest, far and wide, Gathering power and volume as it came,
A sound as of a rushing mighty wind;
And, overhead, like great black goutts of blood Wrung from the awful forehead of the Night
The first drops fell and ceased. Then, suddenly,

Out of the darkness, earth with all her seas,
Her little ships at anchor in the bay (Five ebony ships upon a sheet of silver,

Drake saw not that, indeed, Drake saw not that!),

Her woods, her boughs, her leaves, her tiniest twigs, •

Leapt like a hunted stag through one immense

Lightning of revelation into the murk
Of Erebus: then heaven o'er rending heaven Shattered and crashed down ruin over the world.

But, in that deeper darkness, Francis Drake Stood upright now, and with blind outstretched arms

Groped at that strange forgotten cliff and shell
Of mystery; for in that flash of light Æons had passed; and now the Thing in front Made his blood freeze with memories that lay Behind his Memory. In the gloom he groped, And with dark hands that knew not what they knew,

As one that shelters in the night, unknowing, Beneath a stranded shipwreck, with a cry He touched the enormous rain-washed belted ribs

And bones like battlements of some Mastodon Embedded there until the trump of doom.

After long years, long centuries, perchance, Triumphantly some other pioneer Would stand where Drake now stood and read the tale

Of ages where he only felt the cold Touch in the dark of some huge mystery;
Yet Drake might still be nearer to the light Who now was whispering from his great deep heart,

“Show me Thy ways, O God, teach me Thy paths!”

And there by some strange instinct, oh, he felt God's answer there, as if he grasped a hand

Across a gulf of twice ten thousand years;
And he regained his lost magnificence Of faith in that great Harmony which resolves

Our discords, faith through all the ruthless laws

Of nature in their lovely pitilessness, Faith in that Love which outwardly must
wear,

Through all the sorrows of eternal change,
The splendour of the indifference of God.

All round him through the heavy purple
gloom

Sloped the soft rush of silver-arrowed rain, Loosening the skies' hard anguish as with tears.

Once more he felt his unity with all The vast composure of the universe,
And drank deep at the fountains of that peace

Which comprehends the tumult of our days.
But with that peace the power to act returned;

And, with his back against the Mastodon, He stared through the great darkness tow'nds
the sea.

The rain ceased for a moment: only the slow Drip of the dim droop-feathered palms all round

Deepened the hush.

Then, out of the gloom once more
The whole earth leapt to sight with all her woods,

Her boughs, her leaves, her tiniest twigs distinct

For one wild moment; but Drake only saw The white flash of her seas and there, oh
there

That land-locked bay with those five elfin ships, Five elfin ebony ships upon a sheet

Of wrinkled silver! Then, as the thunder followed,

One thought burst through his brain—

•      Where was the sixth?

Over the grim precipitous edge he hung,
An eagle waiting for the lightning now To swoop upon his prey. One iron hand Gripped a rough tree-root like a bunch of snakes;

And, as the rain rushed round him, far away
He saw to northward yet another flash,
A scribble of God's finger in the sky Over a waste of white stampeding waves.
His eye flashed like a falchion as he saw it,
And from his lips there burst the sea-king's laugh;      •

For there, with a fierce joy he knew, he knew Doughty, at last—an open mutineer!
An open foe to fight! Ay, there she went,— His Golden Hynde, his little Golden Hynde

A wild deserter scudding to the North.
And, almost ere the lightning, Drake had gone Crashing down the face of the precipice, By a narrow water-gully, and through the huge Forest he tore the straight and perilous way Down to the shore; while, three miles to the North,
Upon the wet poop of the Golden Hynde Doughty stood smiling. Scarce would he have smiled
Knowing that Drake had seen him from that tower
Amidst the thunders; but, indeed, he thought He had escaped unseen amidst the storm.
Many a day he had worked upon the crew, Fanning their fears and doubts until he won The more part to his side. And when they reached That coast, he showed them how Drake meant to sail

Southward, into the unknown Void ; but he Would have them suddenly slip by stealth away

Northward to Darien, showing them what a life

Of golden glory waited for them there, If, laying aside this empty quest, they joined The merry feasters round those island fires Which over many a dark-blue creek illumed Buccaneer camps in scarlet logwood groves, Fringing the Gulf of Mexico, till dawn Summoned the Black 'Flags out to sweep
the sea.

But when Drake reached the flower-em-bowered boat,
And found the men awaiting his return There, in a sheltering grove of bread-fruit trees
Beneath great eaves of leafage that obscured

Their sight, but kept the storm out, as they tossed

Pieces of eight or rattled the bone dice, His voice went through them like a thunderbolt,

For none of them had seen the Golden Hynde Steal from the bay; and now the billows burst

Like cannon down the coast; and they had
thought

Their boat could not be launched until the storm

Abated. Under Drake's compelling eyes, Nevertheless, they poled her down the creek Without one word, waiting their chance.

Then all

Together with their brandished oars they thrust,

And on the fierce white out-draught of a wave

They shot up, up and over the toppling crest Of the next, and plunged crashing into the vale

Behind it : then they settled at their thwarts,
And the fierce water boiled before their blades
As, with Drake's iron hand upon the helm, They soared and crashed across the rolling séas.

Not for the Spanish prize did Drake now steer,

But for that little ship the Marygold, Swiftest of sail, next to the Golden Hynde,
And, in the hands of Francis Drake, indeed Swiftest of all ; and ere the seamen knew What power, as of a wind, bore them along, Anchor was up, their hands were on the sheets,

The sails were broken out, the Marygold
Was flying like a storm-cloud to the North,

And on her poop an iron statue still As death stood Francis Drake.

One hour they rushed Northward, with green seas washing o'er the deck

And buffeted with splendour; then they saw
The Golden Hynde like some wing-broken gull With torn mismanaged plumes beating the air
In peril of utter shipwreck; saw her fly Half-mast, a feeble signal of distress Despite all Doughty's curses; for her crew With wild divisions torn amongst themselves Most gladly now surrendered in their hearts, As close alongside grandly onward swept The Marygold, with canvas trim and taut Magnificently drawing the full wind, Her gunners waiting at their loaded guns Bare-armed and silent; and that iron soul Alone, upon her silent quarter-deck.
There they hauled up into the wind and lay

Rocking, while Drake, alone, without a guard, Boarding the runaway, dismissed his boat Back to the Marygold. Then his voice out-rang

Trumpet-like o'er the trembling mutineers, And clearly, as if they were but busied still About the day's routine. They hid their shame,

As men that would propitiate a god,
By flying to fulfil his lightest word;
And ere they knew what power, as of a

Impelled them—that half wreck was trim and taut,

Her sails all drawing and her bows afoam;
And, creeping past the Marygold once more, She led their Southward way! And not till then

Did Drake vouchsafe one word to the white
face

Of Doughty, as he furtively slunk nigh With some new lie upon his fear-parched lips

Thirsting for utterance in his crackling laugh
Of deprecation; and with one ruffling puff
Of pigeon courage in his blinded soul—

“I am no sea-dog—even Francis Drake Would scarce misuse a gentleman. Thank God

I am a gentleman!” And there Drake turned

And summoned four swart seamen out by name.

His words went like a cold wind through their flesh

As with a passionless voice he slowly said, “Take ye this fellow: bind him to the mast Until what time I shall decide his fate.”

And Doughty gasped as at the world's blank end,—

"Nay, Francis," cried he, "wilt thou thus misuse

A gentleman?" But as the seamen gripped His arms he struggled vainly and furiously To throw them off; and in his impotence Let slip the whole of his treacherous cause and hope

In empty wrath,—“Fore God,” he foamed and snarled,

“Ye shall all smart for this when we return!
Unhand me, dogs! I have Lord Burleigh’s power

Behind me. There is nothing I have done Without his warrant! Ye shall smart for this!
Unhand me, I say, unhand me!”

And in one flash Drake saw the truth, and Doughty saw his eyes

Lighten upon him; and his false heart quailed

Once more; and he suddenly suffered himself Quietly, strangely, to be led away
And bound without a murmur to the mast.
And strangely Drake remembered, as those words,

"Ye shall all smart for this when we return," Yelped at his faith, how while the Dover cliffs Faded from sight he leaned to his new friend Doughty and said: "I blame them not who stay!

I blame them not at all who cling to home,
For many of us, indeed, shall not return,
Nor ever know that sweetness any more."

And when they had reached their anchorage anew,

Drake, having now resolved to bring his fleet Beneath a more compact control, at once Took all the men and the chief guns and stores

From out the Spanish prize; and sent Tom
Moone

To set the hulk afire. Also he bade Unbind the traitor and ordered him aboard
The pinnacle Christopher. John Doughty, too, He order'd thither, into the grim charge Of old Tom Moone, thinking it best to keep The poisonous leaven carefully apart Until they had won well Southward, to a place

Where, finally committed to their quest,
They might arraign the traitor without fear Or favour, and acquit him or condemn.
But those two brothers, doubting as the false

Are damned to doubt, saw murder in his eyes,

And thought "He means to sink the smack one night,"

And they refused to go, till Drake abruptly

Ordered them straightway to be slung on board

With ropes.

The daylight waned; but ere the sun Sank, the five ships were plunging to the South;

For Drake would halt no longer, lest the crews

Also should halt betwixt two purposes.

He took the tide of fortune at the flood;

And onward through the now subsiding
storm,

Ere they could think what power as of a wind

Impelled them, he had swept them on their way.

Far, far into the night they saw the blaze

That leapt in crimson o'er the abandoned hulk

Behind them, like a mighty hecatomb

Marking the path of some Titanic will.

Many a night and day they Southward drove.
Sometimes at midnight round them all the sea Quivered with witches' oils and water snakes, Green, blue, and red, with lambent tongues of fire.

Mile upon mile about the blurred black hulls
A cauldron of tempestuous colour coiled.
On every mast mysterious meteors burned,
And from the shores a bellowing rose and fell As of great bestial gods that walked all night Through some wild hell unknown, too vast for men ;

But when the silver and crimson of the dawn Broke out, they saw the tropic shores anew, The fair white foam, and, round about the rocks,

Weird troops of tusked sea-lions; and the
world

Mixed with their dreams and made them stranger still.

And, once, so fierce a tempest scattered the fleet

That even the hardest souls began to think
There was a Jonah with them; for the seas Rose round them like green mountains, peaked and ridged

With heights of Alpine snow amongst the clouds;

And many a league to Southward, when the ships

Gathered again amidst the sinking waves Four only met. The ship of Thomas Drake Was missing; and some thought it had gone down

With all hands in the storm. But Francis
Drake

Held on his way, learning from hour to hour
To merge himself in immortality;
Learning the secret of those pitiless laws Which dwarf all mortal grief, all human pain,

To something less than nothing by the side
Of that eternal travail dimly guessed, Since first he felt in the miraculous dark
The great bones of the Mastodon, that hulk Of immemorial death. He learned to judge
The passing pageant of this outward world
As by the touch-stone of that memory;
Even ~~as~~ in that country which some said Lay now not far, the great Tezcucan king, Resting his jewelled hand upon a skull,
And on a smouldering glory of jewels throned
There in his temple of the Unknown God Over the host of Aztec princes, clad In golden hauberks gleaming under soft Surcoats of green or scarlet feather-work, Could in the presence of a mightier power Than life or death give up his guilty sons,
His only sons, to the sacrificial sword.
And hour by hour the soul of Francis Drake, Unconscious as an oak-tree of its growth,

Increased in strength and stature as he drew Earth, heaven, and hell within him, more and more.

For as the dream we call 'our world, with all Its hues is but a picture in the brain,
So did his soul enfold the universe
With gradual sense of superhuman power, While every visible shape within the vast Horizon seemed the symbol of some thought Waiting for utterance. He had found indeed God's own Nirvana, not of empty dream But of intensest life! Nor did he think Aught of all this; but, as the rustic deems The colours that he carries in his brain Are somehow all outside him while he peers Unaltered through two windows in his face, Drake only knew that as the four ships
plunged Southward, the world mysteriously grew More like a prophet's vision, hour by hour,

Fraught with dark omens and significances,
A world of hieroglyphs and sacred signs Wherein he seemed to read the truth that lay Hid from the Roman augurs when of old They told the future from the flight of birds.
How vivid with disaster seemed the flight Of those blood-red flamingoes o'er the dim Blue steaming forest, like two terrible thoughts Flashing, unapprehended, through his brain!

And now, as they drove Southward, day and night,
Through storm and calm, the shores that fleeted by Grew wilder, grander, with his growing soul,
And pregnant with the approaching mystery.
And now along the Patagonian coast They cruised, and in the solemn midnight
    saw Wildernesses of shaggy barren marl,

Petrified seas of lava, league on league, Craters and bouldered slopes and granite cliffs

With ragged rents, grim gorges, deep ravines, And precipice on precipice up-piled Innumerable to those dim distances Where, over valleys hanging in the clouds, Gigantic mountains and volcanic peaks Catching the wefts of cirrus fleece appeared To smoke against the sky, though all was now

Dead as that frozen chaos of the moon,
Or some huge passion of a slaughtered soul Prostrate under the marching of the stars.

At last, and in a silver dawn, they came Suddenly on a broad-winged estuary,
And, in the midst of it, an island lay.
There they found shelter, on its leeward side,
And Drake convened upon the Golden Hynde

His dread court-martial. Two long hours he heard

Defence and accusation, then broke up The conclave, and, with burning heart and brain, .

Feverishly seeking everywhere some sign To guide him, went ashore upon that isle,
And lo, turning a rugged point of rock, He rubbed his eyes to find out if he dreamed,

For there—a Crusoe's wonder, a miracle,
A sign—before him stood on that lone strand Stark, with a stern arm pointing out his way
And jangling still one withered skeleton, The grim black gallows where Magellan hanged .

His mutineers. Its base was white with bones Picked by the gulls, and crumbling o'er the sand

A dread sea-salt, dry from the tides of time.

There, on that lonely shore, Death's finger-post

Stood like some old forgotten truth made strange

By the long lapse of many memories,

All starting up in resurrection now

As at the trump of doom, heroic ghosts

Out of the cells and graves of his deep brain Reproaching him. "*Were this man not thy

friend,*

Ere now he should have died the traitor's death.

What wilt thou say to the others if they, too,

Prove false? Or wilt thou slay the lesser and save

The greater sinner? Nay, if thy right hand

Offend thee, cut it off!" And, in one flash,

Drake saw his path and chose it.

With a voice

Low as the passionless anguished voice of Fate

That comprehends all pain, but girds it round

With iron, lest some random cry break out For man's misguidance, he drew all his men Around him, saying, "Ye all know how I loved

Doughty, who hath betrayed me twice and thrice,

For I still trusted him: he was no felon
That I should turn my heart away from him!
He is the type and image of man's laws;
While I—am lawless as the soul that still Must sail and seek a world beyond the worlds, A law behind earth's laws. I dare not judge!
But ye—who know the mighty goal we seek,
Who have seen him sap our courage, hour
by hour,

Till God Himself almost appeared a dream Behind his technicalities and doubts Of aught he could not touch or handle; ye Who have seen him stir up jealousy and strife Between our seamen and our gentlemen,

Even as the world stirs up continual strife, Bidding the man forget he is a man With God's own patent of nobility; Ye who have seen him strike this last sharp blow—

Sharper than any enemy hath struck,— Ay, Jonathan, mine own familiar friend,
He whom I trusted, he alone could strike
So sharply, for indeed I loved this man.
Judge ye—for see, I cannot. Do not doubt
I loved this man!

But now, if ye will let him have his life, Oh, speak! But, if ye think it must be death,

Hold up your hands in silence!" His voice dropped,

And eagerly he whispered forth one word Beyond the scope of Fate—"Yet, oh, my friends,

I would not have him die!" There was no sound

Save the long thunder of eternal seas,— Drake bowed his head and prayed.

Then, suddenly,
One man upheld his hand; and, all at once,
A brawny forest of brown arms arose
In silence, and the great sea whispered Death.

There, with one big swift impulse, Francis
Drake

Held out his right sun-blackened hand and gripped

The hand that Doughty proffered him; and lo, Doughty laughed out and said, "Since I must die,

Let us have one more hour of comradeship, One hour as old companions. Let us make A feast here, on this island, ere I go Where there is no more feasting." So they made

A great and solemn banquet as the day Decreased; and Doughty bade them all unlock

Their sea-chests and bring out their rich array.

There, by that wondering ocean of the West, In crimson doublets, lined and slashed with
gold,

In brodered lace and double golden chains Embossed with rubies and great cloudy pearls
They feasted, gentleman adventurers, Drinking old malmsey, as the sun sank down.

Now Doughty, fronting the rich death of day,
And flourishing a silver pouncet-box
With many a courtly jest and rare conceit, There as he sat in rich attire, out-braved
The rest. Though darker-hued, yet richer far, His murrey-coloured doublet, double-piled Of Genoa velvet, puffed with ciprus, shone;
For over its grave hues the gems that bossed His golden collar, wondrously relieved, Blazed lustrous to the West like stars. But
Drake

Wore simple black, with midnight silver slashed,

And, at his side, a great two-handed sword.

At last they rose, just as the sun's last rays

Rested upon the heaving molten gold Immeasurable. The long slow sigh of the waves

That creamed across the lonely time-worn reef

All round the island seemed the very voice

Of the Everlasting: black against the sea

The gallows of Magellan stretched its arm

With that gaunt skeleton and its rusty chain

Creaking and swinging in the solemn breath

Of eventide like some strange pendulum

Measuring out the moments that remained.

There did they take the holy sacrament

Of Jesus' body and blood. Then Doughty
    and Drake

Kissed each other, as brothers, on the cheek;

And Doughty knelt. And Drake, without one
    word,

Leaning upon the two-edged naked sword Stood at his side, with iron lips, and eyes Full of the sunset; while the doomed man bowed

His head upon a rock. The great sun dropped

Suddenly, and the land and sea were dark;
And as it were a sign, Drake lifted up The gleaming sword. It seemed to sweep the heavens

Down in its arc as he smote, once, and no more.

Then, for a moment, silence froze their veins, Till one fierce seaman stooped with a hoarse cry;

And, like an eagle clutching up its prey, His arm swooped down and bore the head aloft,

Gorily streaming, by the long dark hair;
And a great shout went up, "So perish all Traitors to God and England." Then Drake turned

And bade them to their ships; and, wondering, They left him. As the boats thrust out from shore

Brave old Tom Moone looked back with faithful eyes

Like a great mastiff to his master's face.

He, looming larger from his loftier ground

Clad with the slowly gathering night of stars

And gazing sea-ward o'er his quiet dead,

Seemed like some Titan bronze in grandeur based

Unshakeable until the crash of doom

Shattered the black foundations of the world.

PRESS OPINIONS.

The Times.—Mr Noyes so charges it with fascination and terror and kaleidoscopic colour, that most readers, we dare to promise, will take its ninety pages at a sitting and turn back to read again. We said just now that he has a fine eye for colour, and will quote a couple of stanzas in proof.....But, indeed, quotation does injustice to a poem which owes its effectiveness to the piling up of picture upon picture with such rapidity that the reader might imagine himself jingling in a palanquin down the long avenue of an Eastern bazaar heaped with silks, tea-chests, trays of jewels, vases, fans, sun-shades, carved ivories, and lacquered arms, and thronged with merchants, seamen, bonzes, pirates, apes, macaws, and mandarins. And through all, as befits the story of a childish dream, there runs an exquisite sense of terror. Also the dream manages to keep throughout the inconsecutiveness proper to dreams—and yet has an artistic unity .....filled with magic and beauty.

The Spectator.—It is much easier to imagine than to put into words what Mr Noyes means by his 'Flower of Old Japan.' Some of us, perhaps, can remember how we built romances out of the oddities of a "willow-pattern" plate. If so, we shall be able to understand Mr Noyes.....[Quotation.].....The fact is, that the charm of the verse eludes us when we try to describe it. We feel it; but we cannot exactly say why, or define it in any intelligible way. Shall we say that it reminds us of 'Alice in Wonderland'? It does after a fashion, though it is not in the least an imitation; and it differs, too, in having a certain seriousness in its phantasy.

PRESS OPINIONS.

The Times (in a review of a column and a half).—Extraordinary promise. ....His singing puts one in mind of the lads commemorated in Stevenson's alcads :—

“ Brave lads in olden musical centuries Sang, night by night, adorable choruses, Sat late by alehouse doors in April Chanting in joy as the moon was rising ”

The Standard.—Mr Noyes is something of a symbolist and something of a mystic. Several of his poems breathe that strange yearning for the Infinite and the elusive, that which is perceptible in so much that is most interesting in the contemporary poetry of England and France. It is characteristic of the whole school that, like their exemplar, Shelley, they are studiously and deliberately vague. Sometimes they are apt to become so esoteric that only the initiated can understand them. This, however, is not the case with Mr Noyes, whose style is lucid and simple.

“ Desire of the moth for the star, Of the night for the morrow,”

The Speaker.—To read it is to pass with delight from one beauty to another to the very end of the volume. No ill-wrought line, no overstrained expression, no lapse of melody, offends the eye and ear, for Mr Noyes, of whom we know nothing beyond this book, is a sure and cunning workman, with a fine technical command of his material. [Quotation.] .....That has a magical charm ; fine thought is wedded to a haunting rhythm, and the music vibrates and vibrates away, and is caught and repeated, and fades and swells as the hand of a poet touches the strings. ....Mr Noyes is a poet. No other word is adequate.

George Meredith.—“ Michael Oaktree ” is worthy of praise, not only as a performance, but also as an intimation of strength coming.
